

The Impact of Trauma on Children, Practitioners and Services

One-day conference, Glasgow

Friday, 17 March, 2017

Complex and cumulative trauma may impact on every aspect of a child's life, affecting their brain and emotional development, their capacity to self-regulate and their ability to form fulfilling relationships. Those caring for, teaching or working with children who have experienced profound neglect, abuse or loss may also encounter real difficulties in understanding the significance of the child's experience and the impact this can also have on them as practitioners.

This conference, the 4th in our series focusing on relationship-based practice with children, young people and their families, aims to consider the impact of trauma as it reverberates throughout the system, between child, caregiver, practitioner and institution. The day will bring together diverse perspectives and focus on how a deeper understanding of the range of presentations and feelings encountered may inform work practice and service delivery. The day will also consider the impact on services which are equally vulnerable to the unconscious processes of anxiety and defences inherent in trauma work. Organisations have an important role in containing and managing such dynamics both internally and as they relate to the wider system.

ABOUT HUMAN DEVELOPMENT SCOTLAND

Human Development Scotland (HDS) is a registered charity working to improve the mental health and emotional wellbeing of individuals, families and communities in Scotland, regardless of context or means, and to increase the effectiveness of organisations. We do this through professional training, organisational consultancy and therapeutic services which draw on psychodynamic, psychoanalytic and systemic ideas that offer a profound understanding of how people relate to one another.

WE AIM TO:

1. Develop appropriately accredited practitioners in psychological therapies and related fields in ways which respect individual needs and values, and recognise the importance of personal and professional relationships together with their impact on people's mental health and emotional wellbeing.
2. Increase the resilience and capabilities of individuals, groups and communities they work with by fostering a deeper understanding of what it means to be human.

WHAT WE DO:

Training & education for professionals:

- Postgraduate training in counselling and psychotherapy at certificate, diploma, masters and doctoral-level relevant to working with adults, children and young people
- Short courses for individuals and organisations, ranging from one-day workshops to 10-week courses to foster understanding of personal and professional relationships and their impact on people's mental health and emotional wellbeing
- CPD conferences and events for people working across the NHS, social care, and the 3rd sector

Services for individuals and organisations:

- Therapeutic counselling and psychotherapy for adults, children & families
- Organisational consultancy
- Clinical supervision for the NHS, local authorities and 3rd sector organisations

Please contact us for more information or visit our website for details of our courses and services
